Commentary

On this Curing the Future: Medicine and Disease course, students have a good understanding of the anatomy and pathophysiology of diseases within the cardiovascular, respiratory, gastrointestinal and nervous systems. They have explored cutting-edge technology in medicine as well as been introduced to pioneering innovations and research being undertaken in recent times which have the potential to change the face of medicine and surgery. Students feel comfortable diagnosing certain common systematic conditions and how to formulate a treatment plan for these. They have practical experience in medical emergency and clinical procedures. Students have worked well as a team and understand the importance of leadership and collaboration in the world of medicine. Students have a good start on their journey to helping 'cure the future!'
